Exercise 3: Inviting People To a Party

Write a party invitation to your friends. Think about what type of party you are going to have and how you would like your friends to come dressed.

Teacher's Notes

The objective in this lesson is to ensure that students have a clear idea of dress codes in English. This is primarily a lesson in lexis, but it is also an opportunity to learn about English culture and for students going to an English speaking country it will help them to adapt to their new environment.

There are some differences between countries, but this lesson should cover the main types of clothing requirements.

Lesson Plan Idea

Possible Warmers:

- Bring in some clothes, especially if you've got clothes they wouldn't normally wear and ask students if they like them. (Maybe even ask them to try them on.)
- Ask students what they like to wear
- Show them some pages from a fashion magazine and ask them what they like best.

Main Lesson:

1. Ask the students to match the cards in pairs or groups. (For younger students you might ask them to find these types of clothes in magazines and cut them out.)
2. Ask the students to do exercise 1 in pairs and then elicit the answers from the class.
3. Ask the students to then follow this up with exercise 2. You might want to put students in groups for this so that they can discuss different ideas. Again feedback as a class.
4. There is a follow up writing exercise, which can either be done as a simple advert for lower levels, a letter at higher levels or a business invitation for business classes.

Vocabulary Background info

Formal Evening - Black Tie is British, Tux and Tuxedo are American. (however they are all widely used in all English speaking countries)

Formal Business - Formal business wear varies from country to country for women. In some companies it is normal for women to wear trouser suits but in more traditional Western companies a skirt-suit is expected. In some Muslim countries a woman maybe expected to cover herself completely and in Malaysia and Indonesia women sometimes wear traditional clothing to work.

Smart Casual - Smart Casual generally means long-sleeved shirt, trousers and formal shoes. In Australia a short-sleeved shirt is acceptable and in some Asian counties this may mean Shirt and tie.
